

The needs in Clark County

Clark County is particularly positioned to benefit from a state youth development grant program.

There are over 118 youth programs in the county registered in Elevate Washington, a statewide youth program directory—the fourth largest county for youth programs within the directory.

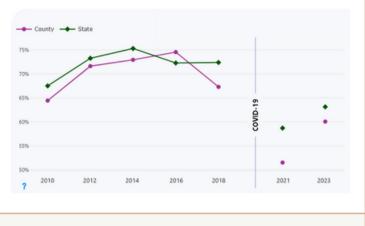

However, multiple data points indicate a high need to strengthen access to youth programs in the region. Youth responding to the Washington State Healthy Youth Survey reported a significant drop in access to youth development opportunities in 2021, which has remained low in 2023 and falls significantly below the state average.

Further, Clark County youth that identified as Black and Hispanic in this survey were significantly less likely to report access to youth development than their white peers.

Chart: Percent of Clark County 8th graders reporting they have access to youth development opportunities in their communities over time. Healthy Youth Survey

Access to Youth Development Opportunities, Clark County—Greatest disparities by race

A solution for Clark County

State funding is necessary to address the geographic equity gaps in access to youth development in Washington state.

An open, transparent, and accessible state grant program for youth development is urgently needed as a more efficient, impactful, and equitable approach to funding criticallyneeded youth development programs.

Geographic Equity in Youth Development

It's time to invest in youth development

Investing in afterschool, summer, and mentoring programs means investing in Washington's future. Young people spend most of their time outside school, yet access to high-quality youth programs remains limited, especially in BIPOC and rural communities. It's about time for Washington legislators to prioritize youth development and ensure resources reach all young people. Funding youth development means providing equitable opportunities for our youth to reach the future they envision. The time to act and invest in our youth is now.

State investment is essential to advancing equity in Washington State

Parent fees, private philanthropy, and local public funding are currently the primary funding streams for youth development programs in Washington. Availability of these funds is highly uneven across the state, resulting in highly inequitable access to youth programs in many parts of our state, especially in rural communities and communities of color.

Currently, there is no state investment in the broader youth development sector. Left with no open way to access state dollars, some organizations have been able to secure some funding through individual budget provisos, but far too many have not. An analysis of provisos for youth development in last year's state supplemental budget showed an inequitable geographic impact: over $5M of funds were directed to programs in specific regions or counties, with only 6% benefiting youth in counties east of the Cascades.

Further, there are small pockets of state funding for subsets of programs, but without an overarching strategic investment in the sector, each of these initiatives is hampered by the lack of sustainability and capacity of youth-serving organizations to partner in many under-resourced parts of our state.

Education Service Districts ranged from 58.4% to 72.2%

